

RULES ON THE USE OF INTEREURO DATA

- The raw datasets can be consulted and used freely for academic purposes.
- In order to ensure anonymity, we have deleted those parts that may violate anonymity rules. This concerns respondent names, names of the organizations involved as well as potentially sensitive data (e.g. organizations' budgets or financial resources).
- If users need access to these specific parts of the data, please mail the contact person mentioned on the website for a specific dataset. Note however, that this data will only be shared to a very limited extent.
- Questionnaires can be used for replication purposes on the condition that the authors of the questionnaire are consulted in advance and that the original questionnaire is cited. Cite the researchers who developed the questionnaire and/or the overview papers listed on this website.
- Members of INTEREURO may help users with small and topical queries and clarify some issues. However, we cannot provide detailed advice on how to use the data. We are currently working on other projects and the number of questions we receive prevent us to provide detailed responses to everyone who plans to make use of this data.
- If you encounter any problems in one of the datasets (incorrect variable-names, unclear codings and so on), please contact the relevant contact person of the specific dataset. If users unknowingly or unintentionally report some 'error' or some invalid results in their own work (because of a problem with the data-set, the fact that they reorganized the data), the INTEREURO-team cannot be held responsible for this.
- If you used the data in a publication, please let us know, as we are interested in seeing how our data is used. We would also be happy to receive PDF files of publications that use our data.
